Rural veterinary practitioners face a multitude of different situations and experiences compared to colleagues practicing in urban areas. The SDSU Professional Program in Veterinary Medicine (PPVM) is focused on admitting and training veterinarians to enter rural practice in the Upper Midwest region. VET 651 will introduce and develop core skillsets in PPVM students that will be vital to success as a rural practitioner, thus encouraging and equipping the next generation of rural veterinarians to contribute to the promotion of animal and public health while being a contributing member to rural communities.
